Foreword

In order to plan intelligently for future needs an adequate knowledge of population trends and conditions is a basic necessity. To supply this information the Census figures for each county and Baltimore City have been compiled from 1930 through 1960 by broad age groupings. Population figures for 1965 and 1970 have been projected for these age groups to serve as guides for many planning purposes.

A "component" method was used to derive the population projections for the political subdivisions of Maryland. Projections of each component of population, i.e., births, deaths and net migration, were made for five-year time periods. A "cohort survival" method was used in which the current population was carried forward, age by age for each five-year time period. This method is essentially the same as that used by the Bureau of the Census in making projections for each State.

The births, deaths and net migration for each county were carefully analyzed from 1949 through 1960 in order to determine the rates which were most applicable in each instance. The age group under five was determined by estimating survivors of births during the appropriate five-year period. The estimate of net migration was then added to the number of survivors in this group giving the total estimate for children under five.

For the remaining age groups, the 1960 population was carried forward by use of appropriate survival factors to 1965 and 1970. The net migration for each age group, based upon past experience and expected changes in the area which would exert an influence on migration, were added to the cohort survivors.

In order to minimize the amount of error inherent in any estimate, these five-year age groups were combined to give the ages which are of most interest to the general public; youth, young adult, mature adult and retirement. These population figures are shown in both graphic and table form.
